The Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta (APEGA) and the Alberta Association of Architects (AAA) Summary and Analysis

This table summarizes the research on restricted practitioners for APEGA and the AAA. Appendix 2A contains the relevant legislative provisions that form the basis of this summary.

From the AAA website:

Restricted Practitioners in Architecture are professional engineers who, for historic reasons, have been granted the right to practice certain restricted parts of the Scope of the Practice of Architecture. This membership category was only available to professional engineers who applied for the certificate before October 1, 1982.

Similarly, Restricted Practitioners in Engineering are professional architects who, for historic reasons, have been granted the right to practice certain restricted parts of the scope of the practice of engineering. Again, this membership category was only available to professional engineers who applied to the certificate before October 1, 1982.
